KEYTON'S STORY

Growing up, Keyton struggled to get along with his family, and at the age of 15, the safest thing for him to do was leave home. He tried staying with friends, but burned bridge after bridge with his substance use, and had to learn to survive on the streets.

For eight years Keyton slept in bushes, or was in and out of shelters, missions, or temporary housing, always getting kicked out eventually for drinking or doing drugs.

Then, Keyton met someone, a mentor, who taught him his life was worth saving. After years of homelessness, and with the help of this new mentor, Keyton realized the value in attending his counseling and medical appointments, made his way into treatment, and then finally into a halfway house.

Now, Community Action Council in Pasco gives him a voucher for his own home. A studio apartment in a clean and sober building. Keyton says "The difference is like night and day." It was weird for the first few months to be indoors all the time, but he wouldn't trade the stability for anything. Now Keyton is holding down a job, addressing his health needs, and actually saving money.

He's figuring out who he is in this new life, teaching himself to play piano, and finally planning for the future. He says "There's really not a way to explain being homeless. You know it's happening but you don't know what it feels like unless you're living it. Access to an affordable home means I don't have to worry about that anymore."
